Questions to think about during an OKR planning session:

- What are our top objectives or primary goals for this quarter or year?
- What are the steps required to accomplish each of these objectives?
- What resources or tools do we need to accomplish these objectives?
- Do we have the expertise required, or do we need to conduct training or bring in outside help?
- What challenges do we anticipate as we work towards these objectives? How can we turn these challenges into opportunities?
- How can we measure our progress towards these objectives? What are the key performance indicators (KPIs)?
- What are the key results or outcomes that we're aiming for?
- What are the specific actions or initiatives required to achieve these key results?
- Who should be responsible for keeping track of progress and holding team members accountable for each of these actions?
- How can different teams and individuals best collaborate on these shared objectives?
- How often should we check in and update each other on our progress towards these objectives?
